Greening the Earth. Zak Greening opens a new gallery in Wincanton

- ▶ A stunning new art gallery has opened in Wincanton High Street in the 18th century building that was Clementina's. It is the result of co-operation between the property's owner, Nicolas Cage and the artist Zak Greening. Together with several other local artists Zak has been working for months both to produce new work and to transform the interior of this old shop into a large exhibition space. This now has "eco" murals on the walls and spaces for future studios. The gallery also opens onto a beautiful walled garden where sculpture can be displayed.
- ▶ All this was on show when the doors opened on Saturday the 21st of September and the people of Wincanton (500 of them) flooded in to see what had been going on behind the doors of this well-known building. Everyone was amazed and impressed and compliments flowed. It is Zac's intention that the gallery should show contemporary work by local artists with a community and environmental focus and this first exhibition certainly achieves this. Together with works by Zac there is on display works by Fay Hutchcroft, John Bartholomew, Margaret Irving Miller, Patrick Bateman and Richard Howell. The gallery as part of Somerset Arts Week will be open daily 11am-4pm except for Mondays until October 6th
